PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE

Sue Chalupa Breese

Our nation's emergency departments are places to receive treatment for injuries, but for thousands of nurses, emergency departments are the sources of injury. A new study by the Emergency Nurses Association (ENA) finds that more than one-half of emergency nurses report experiencing physical violence on the job, including incidents such as being "spit on," "hit," "pushed or shoved," "scratched," and "kicked."

One in four has experienced such violence more than 20 times in the past three years. Just as alarming, one in five nurses has experienced verbal abuse more than 200 times during the same period. "People who work in helping professions shouldn't have to put their physical and emotional well-being on hold to do their jobs," states ENA President Bill Briggs, RN, MSN, CEN, FAEN. "Emergency nurses provide crucial health care services. Their departments and their hospitals depend on them being able to deliver high quality care. They can't do that if they're in danger of being verbally or physically abused."

ENA's ED Violence Surveillance Survey defines workplace violence "as an act of aggression directed toward persons at work or on duty, ranging from offensive or threatening language to homicide. Workplace violence is commonly understood as any physical assault, emotional or verbal abuse or threatening, harassing or coercive behavior in the work setting that causes physical and/or emotional harm."

An Emergency Nurse's story of violence while at work.....

As an emergency nurse for 30 years, I know both the joys and hardships of my profession. Recently, I was urgently called into a room where two security guards, a male physician, a nurse and a tech were trying to restrain an agitated, verbally abusive, violent patient. During this restraint, the security guard who was holding the patient's head and shoulders was called away for a problem outside the room. I was positioned to hold the patient's left shoulder and right hand with my back to the patient, so I did not see security leave while restraints were being placed. I was bitten in the left forearm by the patient. All maneuvers to extricate myself were ineffective. The bite to my forearm felt like a vise grip! An open hand strike to the patient's face released her excruciating teeth grip from my arm. Prior self defense training in the hospital taught the emergency department staff to do whatever it took to 'regain control of the situation.' Multiple holds and defensive kicks, slaps and punches were taught. I never thought in all my years that I would ever have a need to use this training! Prior to my assault, the patient had punched a security guard in the head. It was our choice to have the patient arrested after medical evaluation.

After emergent treatment of the human bite to my forearm, I returned as the charge nurse to an overloaded emergency department with extended wait times to provide care to those who were waiting, putting their needs before my own.

I received no support from the nurse manager for almost two weeks during an apparent suspension without pay while the hospital investigation was performed. This was an ordeal both mentally and physically that proved to be an overwhelming time for me.

The lack of communication from the hospital was deafening. I felt victimized again!

I was told by the Emergency Department Medical Director, the Nursing Director and Vice President/ Chief Operating Officer of the hospital that I "was not being ignored". I considered these leaders in the corporation as friends for the many years of my employment. We had spoken in the past about major concerns and problems. I knew they cared about me, as they knew my personal and professional principals as being appropriate and on the side of right. I felt they were also caught in the net of "due process."

It will be a long term healing process for me upon returning to the emergency department, a place that I love, and I am hoping to ensure a safer work place for emergency nurses by educating them through my own experience.

So as President of New York State Emergency Nurses Association, I ask the question, "How do we inculcate all levels of our organization in a culture that recognizes and mitigates this environment?"

Is there an end to the 'dark tunnel' with a 'ray of light' at the end that keeps an emergency department safe for all staff? How do we extinguish the violence that occurs? We must ensure a safer workplace for emergency nurses.

As stated in the article "Violence Against Nurses Working in U.S. Emergency Departments" published in the July/August issue of the Journal of Nursing Administration, these are key concepts that need to be incorporated into the culture of each department:

- Encourage nurse executives to take steps to make the department safe.
- Establish a culture of acceptance for reporting violence incidents.
- Develop clear and consistent procedures for reporting violent incidents.
- Provide access to medical care and follow up counseling, as needed, for emergency department staff who are victims of workplace violence.
- Appoint an interdisciplinary task force to identify vulnerabilities in the emergency department and develop a plan for preventing, mitigating, responding to and reporting violence.

I invite everyone to get involved, read the studies, and gather information regarding this very important issue. A starting place would be to visit the Emergency Nurses Association website www.ena.org and look for the ENA Study on Violence Against Nurses in U.S. Emergency Departments - New Study Finds found under "Breaking News, National News."

EMERGENCY NURSES WEEK CELEBRATION

October 11-17, 2009

Melaney Gordon, RN

The Adult Emergency Department (ED) at New York Presbyterian Hospital/Columbia will be hosting a weeklong celebration of Emergency Nurses Week. The kickoff event will be a community health outreach day to be held in the hospital's lobby. Health screening exams will be offered to patients, visitors and employees with emphasis on health education and use of emergency services.

Other activities include an ED open house for nurses from other departments within the organization. The goal is to showcase emergency nursing and strengthen relationships with nursing colleagues.

A breakfast reception on Emergency Nurses Day, October 14th will congratulate ED nurses and support staff for accomplishments and dedication in one of the most challenging departments. Speakers will include senior hospital management and emergency medical staff. Additionally, there will be a luncheon during which the department will present a fundraising award to the Medical Center Neighborhood Charity, which provides grants to organizations that provide essential community services.

A motivational speaking engagement by a guest from the ENA local chapter will bring the celebration to a passionate close. Nurses will be invited to participate in discussions that embody the objectives for this year's ENA annual conference to Strengthen, Transform and Transcend our practice.

CHATT CHAPTER HOSTS FORENSIC SPEAKER

Jacquie Glendingning

On June 16th the CHATT Chapter hosted Mark Williams, Esq., a well-known speaker on the topic of evidence collection. Mr. Williams is with the Cattaraugus County Public Defenders Office. The event was open to the EMS community and was well attended. The speaker was informative and personable. The question and answer period was very informative for the Pre-hospital Personnel and Emergency Department nurses in attendance, each with their own set of concerns.

TNCC/ENPC/CATN NEWS

Joanne Fadale, RN, BSN, FAEN, Chair

Congratulations to the five new TNCC instructors: S. Kaye, L. Loewy, T. Plaginos, B. Romani and R. Wilson and the three new ENPC instructors: J. Castner, M. Feiler, and M. Gomez-Murphy. These dedicated individuals completed the Instructor Course in Stony Brook, NY, sponsored by the New York State Council on August 14, 2009. Additionally, R. Gilchrist from New Hampshire joined the class. The Council is very happy that they will be able to help disseminate courses throughout the state. Adding more instructors was a goal for the Trauma and Pediatric Committee for 2009.

The second committee goal for 2009 was to make the CATN course more available to state members. Three courses have been held, with one remaining. Immediately prior to the November 14, 2009 NYS Council meeting, a CATN course will be held. Please watch the website for information and location.

A reminder to instructors: Read "Course Bytes" on the national ENA website. This is important information for all instructors and course directors. Among the issues that have been presented is the updating of the Suspension /Revocation Policies in the Administrative Procedures. The TNCC/ENPC Administrative Procedures are located on the TNCC and ENPC pages of the ENA website.

In August, 2009, all TNCC instructors should have received the new TNCC Slides and Course Paperwork CD (dated 08/09), which will replace the TNCC CD dated 10/07. The new TNCC CD contains all the material instructors and course directors will need for the Provider, Instructor and Reverification courses. It is important for course directors to note the Reverification course may only be presented to current providers. Providers who have expired are not permitted to take the reverification course and are required to retake the two day TNCC course. This also applies for those individuals who wish to challenge for reverification. The provider status must be current.

It is time for an update of the ENPC course. National ENA has issued a call for individuals who may be interested in assisting with the update. Contact ENPC@ENA.org for information. Thank you to all the dedicated individuals who continue to keep trauma and pediatric care in the forefront by teaching the courses and assuring that New York State Emergency Nurses are well "Prepared for the Unexpected."

REMINDER TO ALL CHAPTER TREASURERS

INTERRUPTIONS EXPERIENCED BY REGISTERED NURSES WORKING IN THE EMERGENCY DEPARTMENT

Lisa Kosits DNP, RN-BC, CCRN, CEN, CPEN

The second most common sentinel event in hospital emergency departments (EDs) is medication error, second to delay in treatment. Common risk factors associated with medication errors in the ED include frequent distraction and interruptions (Health & Hospital Networks, 2006). Relatively little is known about nurse interruptions in the ED. To fulfill my requirement for a practice doctorate in nursing (DNP), I performed a descriptive, observational study in three EDs in the NY metropolitan area to determine (a) the frequency (number per hour) of interruptions that a typical ED nurse experiences, (b) the type of interruptions a typical ED nurse experiences, and (c) the percentage of interruptions that take place during medication preparation, documentation or administration.

A convenience sample of thirty nurses from three of the EDs were observed for 120 minutes each, to determine how many interruptions per hour the ED nurse experienced, the type of interruptions and what percentage of interruptions took place during medication-related activities. A data collection tool was developed to record tasks being performed by the nurses and type of interruption experienced.

A total of 200 interruptions occurred during the 60 hours of observation, or 3.3 interruptions per hour per RN. Of the 20 possible types of interruptions that were identified prior to the observation period, 11 different types of interruptions were actually observed. The majority of interruptions (95%) were related to face-to-face communications with others in the ED. The total number of interruptions related to medication activities was 55 (27.5% of the total number of interruptions). Frequency, but not type, of interruptions varied across the three different EDs.

The results of the study can serve as the basis for subsequent, larger studies that examine more closely the relationship between interruptions and errors in the ED, with the ultimate goal of developing interventions to reduce medication errors and other adverse events due to interruptions.

Brooklyn Staten Island had a presentation on Nurses Responsibility in Receiving Critical Lab Values at their July 22 meeting. They have 247 members.
